Hear at Home gives you back a full life

As we age, our body functions alter in their level of performance. One of the most common effects of aging is hearing loss.

Jennifer Abbott, of North Vancouver's Hear at Home Mobile Hearing Clinic, helps educate people about hearing loss and prevention.

... promotes education about hearing loss and protecting the hearing you still have...

"Hear at Home believes and promotes education about hearing loss and protecting the hearing you still have," says Jennifer. "We offer free seminars to groups of 5 or more who want to learn about hearing loss and what their options may be when seeking help."

Though many people realize they have a hearing problem, it can be difficult to admit.

"On average people wait 7 years to deal with hearing loss once they realize they have a problem," says Jennifer. "I think the Baby Boomer generation is not as likely to compromise their quality of life and this figure will be reduced. I have many clients who say, 'I'm determined to not suffer with my hearing loss like my mom did.'"

Advances in hearing amplification technology and improvements in design have spawned a new generation of hearing aids that are more effective and more discreet.

"Not only are hearing aids smaller, but newer technologies in sound processing translates into a considerable improvement in sound quality making them more appealing to the user."

The 'Open Fit' design is something of a breakthrough.

"Open Fit hearing aids were introduced 5 years ago and people with a common high frequency hearing loss report a significant increase in hearing aid satisfaction. It sits behind the ear with a clear thin tube going into the ear. It's well hidden and offers a more natural sound experience. It's because of this design that people are actually saying, 'I love my new hearing aids.'"

The most important part of the process, however, is getting tested.

The most important part of the process, however, is getting tested.

"Some people don't want their hearing tested because they fear being told what they probably already know- that they have a hearing problem."

By bringing the service directly to you, Hear At Home lets you deal with a difficult issue in the privacy of your home. The testing is free of charge for those 50 and older.

And for people who would rather not get tested at home,

Hear At Home also has an office available where testing can be done discreetly.

"I counsel and train people so that they can also improve their listening and communication skills," says Jennifer. "Counselling and training are vital components of enabling my clients to hear. I help people realize that hearing loss affects not only the person who has it, but also their loved ones. Whenever possible, I include family members in the counselling and training."

Hear At Home also has an office available where testing can be done discreetly.

So much of life's pleasure comes through sound: music, conversation, laughter and more. If you or someone you know has a hearing problem, call Hear at Home today and start the process of reclaiming a full, rich life.
